JAZZ review

By CHIP DEFFAA

It was a night that was good for the soul, a warm, surprise-filled reminder of what it was that drew many of us to jazz in the first place.

On stage at the finale of Thursday's "Highlights in Jazz" concert at NYU were pianist Art Hodes, laying down a bedrock blues foundation as only he can; Doc Cheatham, offering trumpet fills that could have served to accompany Ma Rainey (with whom he worked back in the '20s); Bucky and John Pizzarelli, supplying rhythm; and — an unbilled surprise guest — Freddie Moore, shouting out verse after verse of earthy, old-time blues lines ("The reason my grandmammy so crazy 'bout my grandpappy, he got the same jelly roll I have"). It was an unplanned, unrehearsed afterpiece; no one knew what lines Moore would come out with next — and it was marvelous. Cheatham is 83, Hodes 84, Moore 88 and they are irreplaceable.

Spontaneity was also evident in the Pizzarellis' guitar duets. Their still-deepening rapport is a marvel to hear; the way they'll fade down and come up together, thinking along the same elegant, articulate lines as they pluck their notes.

Hodes got to show his stuff on his hallmark "St. Louis Blues" — a propulsive performance, with repeated bass phrases giving it depth. But in this talent-loaded concert, Hodes was mostly a loyal team player, working subtly to set off Moore, Cheatham and singer Cathy Chamberlain (another surprise guest, who seemed inspired by the august company) as dramatically as possible.

If you want to know what Hodes is capable of on his own, check out his latest album, "Blues in the Night" (Sackville), or catch him when he opens at Fortune Garden Pavilion Nov. 29th.

CHOICES

MUSIC

Highlights in Jazz: Two veterans of the early days in Chicago — Doc Cheatham, who used to sub for Armstrong at the Vendome, and Art Hodes, a master of slow blues — join for one duet. Bucky Pizzarelli, the seven-string guitar wizard, joins with his remarkably like-minded son John for another. November 17 at 8, Loeb Student Center, 566 LaGuardia Place, 998-4999. (Ciddins)

NEW YORK AGENDA

THURSDAY

Two Timing — "Dynamic Duos" is tonight's "Highlights in Jazz" presentation at New York University's Loeb Student Center (566 LaGuardia Pl.; [212] 998-4999). The 8 o'clock show will feature trumpeter Doc Cheatham with pianist Art Hodes, and the father-son team of Bucky and John Pizzarelli. There will also be a "surprise guest."
